All—

The nature of the local news business requires tremendous commitment, passion and a love for the business. So it's not easy to make the decision to leave. When Julie Krallman came to me Friday and told me she had decided to leave ABC7, it was clear she had been thinking about a life change for some time. Julie has invested so much of herself at ABC7 and I know it was an emotional decision. It is hard to imagine such a talented and dedicated person walking away from something she does so well, but Julie has decided the time is right for new challenges and a different lifestyle. Probably the only thing she loves as much as ABC7 is her alma mater Gonzaga University. Julie has accepted the position of Marketing Manager for Gonzaga's Virtual Campus in Spokane, WA. The new job starts soon, and unfortunately, Julie will be with us for only another two weeks before moving on. Julie's positive impact at ABC7 over the past 17 years cannot be overstated. As Morning Executive Producer, Dayside Executive Producer, and ultimately Assistant News Director, Julie has always stayed focused on making every story and every newscast excellent. There have been many career highlights and her finest hour(s) may have come last December 2nd when she led our exemplary coverage of the San Bernardino terrorist attack. I will always be very grateful for her efforts that day. While many of you have worked with Julie for much longer, it has been my particular joy to partner with her in leading this great team over the past year. We will all miss Julie terribly. Her last day is July 8 and we will have an appropriate farewell that day. Please join me in wishing Julie the very best as she embarks on this new adventure.
